

Contributors

CHARLES BAXTER is an Associate Professor of English at Wayne State University. He has published many essays on Modernist fiction, and many stories and poems, including two books of poetry published by New Rivers Press.

DON LARSSON is an Assistant Professor at Mankato State University in Mankato, Minnesota, where he teaches composition and film. His dissertation (1980) was titled "The Film Breaks: Thomas Pynchon and the Cinema." He has written "The Camera Eye: 'Cinematic' Narration in U.S.A. and Gravity's Rainbow" in Ideas of Order in Literature and Film, as well as other articles on film and literature.

EDWARD MENDELSON is Associate Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Columbia University. He is the author of Early Auden (Viking, 1981), and the editor of Pynchon: A Collection of Critical Essays (Prentice-Hall, 1978). He has also edited W. H. Auden: Collected Poems (1976). His essays on Pynchon include "The Sacred, the Profane, and The Crying of Lot 49," and "Gravity's Encyclopedia."

THOMAS H. SCHAUB received his doctorate from the University of Iowa in 1976, and is now Assistant Professor of English at the University of California, Berkeley. He is the author of "Open Letter in Response to Edward Mendelson's 'The Sacred, the Profane, and The Crying of Lot 49'" (Boundary 2, 1976), and Pynchon: The Voice of Ambiguity (Univ. of Illinois Press, 1981).

MARK SIEGEL received his Ph.D. in modern literature and film from the University of Arizona in 1976, and is now an Assistant Professor at the University of Wyoming - Laramie. He is the author of Pynchon: Creative Paranoia in Gravity's Rainbow (Kennikat, 1978). His booklet on Tom Robbins is about to appear in the Boise State Western Writers Series, while another, on Hugo Gernsback, is due out from the Borgo Press. He has published a number of articles on science fiction, film, television, and literature.

The editors would also like to thank the following for their contributions to this issue of Pynchon Notes: Beverly Clark, David Cowart, Bernard Duyfhuizen, John Guzowski, Brian McHale, Clifford Mead, David Mesher, Thomas Piltz, Penelope Price, Laura Provenzano, Yoshiaki Sato, David Seed, Joseph Slade, and Craig Werner.