

Contributors

LOUISA FLEISCHMAN, M.A., has been teaching American literature at the University of Munich; she is presently finishing her Ph.D. thesis on Henry Miller.

MARTIN GREEN is Associate Professor of English at Fairleigh Dickinson University, Madison, NJ. He has published essays on Medieval Literature in JEGP and PLL, on film in Literature/Film Quarterly, and has reviewed books on contemporary and Medieval literature in Style, Dissent, Books & Arts, and The Literary Review. He teaches Medieval Literature, linguistics, and contemporary fiction, and is editor-in-chief of The Literary Review, a quarterly of fiction, poetry, and criticism.

BROOKE HORVATH is a graduate student at Purdue University, where he is writing his dissertation on the search for spiritual fulfillment in contemporary American fiction. He recently presented a paper on John Ashbery's poetry at the University of Louisville's Conference on Twentieth Century Literature. An essay of his on Henry James' short stories of writers and artists will appear in the Spring 1982 issue of Modern Fiction Studies.

DAVID MESHER is a lecturer in the Department of English, Tel-Aviv University.

CAROL PEIRCE is Professor of English at the University of Baltimore. She has taught a number of courses involving Lawrence Durrell and has published several articles on his work. She is currently President of the Lawrence Durrell Society and is completing a book, Lawrence Durrell's City of the Imagination: The Alexandria Quartet.

YOSHIAKI SATO has studied American literature at State University of New York at Buffalo, and is currently doing advanced work at Berkeley in the American Studies Program. In March, he will return to Japan to teach at the Tokyo University of Foreign Studies.

BURT WEINSHANKER, M.A., is currently teaching American drama at the University of Munich.

STEVEN WEISENBURGER is Assistant Professor of English at the University of Kentucky. He is the author of "The End of History? Thomas Pynchon and the Uses of the Past," which appeared in Twentieth Century Literature, and was recently reprinted in Richard Pearce's Critical Essays on Thomas Pynchon.

MATHEW WINSTON received his Ph.D. from Harvard University, and is Assistant Professor of English at the College of William and Mary. He is the author of "The Quest for Pynchon," (which has been translated into Polish and German) and of essays on Nabokov, Beckett, Albee, black humor and Shakespearean drama. His New Concepts of Comedy will be published by Methuen.

The editors would also like to thank the following for their contributions to this issue of Pynchon Notes: Michael Adams, Vincent Balitas, Robert Cullen, Walter Isle, Joel Knudson, W. T. Lhamon, Clifford Mead, Laura Provenzano, and Joseph Slade.